The Utah Labor Commission plays a vital role in Utah's economy by ensuring safety and fairness in the workplace and housing. The Commission's five divisions, Adjudication, Boiler, Elevator and Coal Mine Safety, Industrial Accidents, Utah Antidiscrimination and Labor Division (UALD), and Utah Occupational Safety and Health Administration (UOSH), ensure that the Labor Commission touches every business in Utah in multiple ways. From the Office of Coal Mine Safety in Price to the southern Utah Adjudication office in St. George, to the Commission's HQ in downtown Salt Lake, Utah Labor Commission employees cover the state to enhance safety in Utah's workplaces and achieve fairness in employment and housing.

Boiler, Elevator and Coal Mine Safety

To maximize boiler, elevator and coal mine safety, and provide for effective coal mine accident response.

Adjudication

To conduct all formal Labor Commission hearings in a fair, efficient, courteous, and consistent manner.

Utah Antidiscrimination and Labor (UALD)

To achieve equal employment and fair housing opportunity for all, and assure that Utah employees are paid the wages they have earned.

Industrial Accidents

To assist in resolving disputes involving workplace injuries fairly and efficiently and to monitor and enforce state-required workers' compensation coverage requirements.

Utah Occupational Safety and Health (UOSH)

Helping to ensure a safe and healthy workplace for every worker in the State of Utah.
